covery in stocks to-day after the spasmodic decline just at the opening brought a feeling of relief to general anxiety in the financial district, which reached a stage of acute alarm in brokers' offices, where the course of brokers' offices, where the course of events of Saturday, if continued, would run rapidly into disaster. The strain on the opening of the market was severe as it was, Saturday's violent decline having had the usual after-effects in the augmented volume of selling, some holders either discouraged by the fall or forced to retire by disposing of their stocks on account of the large demands for additional margins from disturbed brokers.

The break at the closing affected the better sentiment, which was growing up.
